

How Radical Professors at America's Top Colleges Indoctrinate Students

In recent years, there has been a growing concern about the political bias of college professors. A 2019 study by the National Association of Scholars found that 60% of college professors identify as liberal, while only 15% identify as conservative. This imbalance is particularly pronounced in the humanities and social sciences, where the vast majority of professors are liberal.

This political bias is having a significant impact on students. A 2018 study by the Pew Research Center found that college students are more likely to identify as liberal than the general public. This is likely due, in part, to the fact that students are being exposed to a constant stream of liberal ideas in the classroom.

The Indoctrination of Students

There are a number of ways in which radical professors indoctrinate students. One common tactic is to present their own political views as objective facts. For example, a professor might claim that socialism is the only moral economic system, or that capitalism is inherently exploitative. Students who are not familiar with the other side of the argument may be persuaded by these claims.

Another tactic used by radical professors is to silence dissenting voices. This can be done through a variety of means, such as refusing to call on students who express conservative views, or by creating a hostile classroom environment for those who disagree with the professor. In some cases, radical professors have even been known to threaten students with violence.

The indoctrination of students by radical professors is a serious problem. It is undermining the intellectual freedom of students and preventing them from getting a well-rounded education. It is also creating a climate of intolerance on college campuses.

The Consequences of Indoctrination

The indoctrination of students by radical professors has a number of negative consequences. One consequence is that it stifles intellectual diversity on college campuses. When students are only exposed to one side of the political spectrum, they are less likely to develop critical thinking skills. They are also more likely to become intolerant of those who disagree with them.

Another consequence of indoctrination is that it can lead to students making poor decisions. For example, a student who is indoctrinated into believing that socialism is the only moral economic system may be more likely to support policies that are harmful to the economy. Similarly, a student who is indoctrinated into believing that capitalism is inherently exploitative may be more likely to support policies that are harmful to businesses.

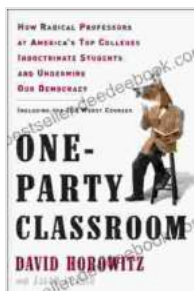

What Can Be Done?

There are a number of things that can be done to address the problem of indoctrination on college campuses. One important step is to increase the transparency of college curricula. Students should be able to see what they are going to be taught in a course before they sign up for it. This will help them to avoid being indoctrinated into a particular political ideology.

Another important step is to encourage intellectual diversity on college campuses. Colleges should hire more professors who have different political views. This will help to ensure that students are exposed to a variety of perspectives.

Finally, it is important to create a climate of tolerance on college campuses. Students should be free to express their opinions without fear of being ridiculed or harassed. This will help to foster a healthy intellectual environment where students can learn and grow.

The indoctrination of students by radical professors is a serious problem that is undermining intellectual freedom on college campuses. It is also creating a climate of intolerance and division. There are a number of things that can be done to address this problem, but it will require a concerted effort from students, faculty, and administrators.
